Brunello di Montalcino

Brunello di Montalcino is a red Italian wine produced in the vineyards surrounding the town of Montalcino located about 120 km south of Florence in the Tuscany wine region. Brunello, a diminutive of Bruno, a male given name which means "brown", is the name that was given locally to what was believed to be an individual grape variety grown in Montalcino. In 1879 the Province of Siena determined, after a few years of controlled experiments, that Sangiovese and Brunello were the same grape variety, and that the former should be its designated name. In Montalcino the name Brunello evolved into the

This Brunello is made of grapes from the estate vines planted from cuttings taken from very old neighbouring vineyards. To fertilise the vineyards only vegetable and animal biodegradable produce are used. After the fermentation, the wine is transferred to medium size oak barrels, where it remains for four years, before being refined in the bottle for another year, after which it is ready to be sold under the DOCG (Denominazione di Origine Controllata e Garantita).

Sicily

Sicily is the largest island in the Mediterranean and has a rich vinous history dating back over 2,500 years. Its classic Mediterranean climate and soil has resulted in an area not only ideal for winemaking but also olives and citrus fruit which are key exports. Mount Etna dominates the landscape providing mineral-rich dark soil and vineyards are being planted higher up the slope. Historically more famous for the production of Marsala, serious transformation is taking place. Sicily is now becoming better known for top quality wines from a range of varieties including Grillo, Catarratto and Nero d'Avola

On the island of Pantelleria the cultivation of the vine is difficult but the result is an extremely sweet wine of great structure, intense bouquet and intoxicating aromas of honey, orange and hints of sweet white flowers. The Zibibbo, from the Arab name Zabib, is the grape used for the production of the famous Passito, the dessert wine which made Sicily renowned in the world of wine. This importance was obtained thanks to the commitment of Rallo, who throughout its history has always developed the wines of Pantelleria. | | |

The grapes come from vineyards situated between 200 and 350 metres above sea level, on clay soils rich in marine fossils. The grapes were hand-picked in several phases and after being taken to the winery, grape bunches were again sorted by hand on a conveyor belt. This was followed by a light pressing without destemming. After the pressing, the must was fermented for 18 days at a temperature of approx. 17°C. The sweet wine that was so obtained was transferred into French oak barrels, where it remained for approx. six months, before being then blended and bottled.

The colour of Muffato della Sala is golden yellow. It is a wine with very intense aromas and taste, characterised by floral and honey-like flavours, followed by fresh, almost citrusy notes.
